INTRODUCTION

Sociology is an examination of the relations between the individual and society. Studying sociology can help you to develop a “sociological imagination” which is a quality of mind that provides us with the ability to understand our own personal experiences as they are shaped by the society in which we live. Sociologists help us to understand how common sense comes to be common sense. In other words, sociology tells us how and why certain ideas are taken for granted and become popular and dominant during different social, economic, and historical time periods. A degree in sociology will provide you with the analytical tools required for engaged citizenship.

Sociology is often referred to as the “queen of the social sciences” because it uses history, anthropology, philosophy, political science, psychology, economics, and statistics to understand social phenomena such as crime, social and economic inequality, student protest, war, totalitarianism, democracies, social stability and upheaval, prejudice and discrimination, immigration and integration, and labour practices and movements.

Undergraduate sociology students learn a variety of rigorous methods used by contemporary sociologists to understand and explain the social world. In part, this involves developing foundational skills in statistical reasoning, qualitative research methods, and sociological theory.

The Sociology Department offers 3-Year BA, 4-Year BA, and Honours degree programs plus a Minor and a Research Methods Certificate. A student whose major lies in a different area may still study Sociology as an elective. Courses in Sociology complement such areas as Political Science, History, Psychology, Education, Criminal Justice, Women’s and Gender Studies, and Environmental Studies. Some interdisciplinary majors also require certain Sociology courses as part of their programs.

An undergraduate degree in Sociology enables one to pursue a variety of vocations in such areas as social welfare, criminal justice, government, journalism, gerontology, urban planning, and industrial relations and administration. Provincial and federal government offices hire a large number of persons with a Sociology background. For those who wish to proceed to studies at the graduate level, a career in university teaching and research is also an option.

GENERAL INFORMATION

Prerequisites

SOC-1100(3) Introduction to Sociology I: Concepts & Methods, or the former SOC-1101(6) Introduction to Sociology is a prerequisite for registration in all Sociology courses at the 2000 level and higher.

Course Offerings

2000- and 3000-level courses may be lecture, seminar or laboratory format, or some combination of these, depending on the orientation of the Instructor and the course enrolment. Usually they are lecture format.
4000-level courses are designed to offer the opportunity for in-depth discussion and analysis of issues and ideas on topics in which the Department members have special interest and expertise. Although 4000-level courses assume some prior experience with the subject under study, previous work experience, a keen interest in the topic or merely a strong desire to gain valuable experience from participating in a small group setting may be enough to outweigh lack of previous course experience. Students must consult with the Sociology Honours Advisor to receive program approval.

4000-Level Courses: Minimum 3.0 GPA (B) in major courses. (Students lacking the requisite 3.0 GPA should consult the department concerned regarding eligibility to take 4000-level courses.) Permission of the Instructor is required for each 4000-level course.

COURSE LISTINGS

The Sociology Department has organized its courses into six areas of study. These divisions are provided as guidelines to areas of study available for concentration. Students can move freely between the areas of study if they do not want to develop a concentration.

Students are advised to consult with Academic Advising in planning their course of study. Please refer to WebAdvisor or the Timetable available on the university website for courses to be offered in an upcoming term.
