UNIVERCITIES

HIGHER EDUCATION AND THE NEW MANAGEMENT OF URBAN DISTRICTS

Wednesday,
September 13th
6:00PM

Leatherdale Hall,
The University of Winnipeg

Today colleges and universities are the dominant employers, real estate holders, policing agents, and educational and health care providers in major cities where they once played a less prominent role. The growing influence of higher education forces us to take a sober look at the rise and implications of what Baldwin calls "UniverCities". At this free public lecture, Baldwin will look at university-community relationships to examine the promise and pitfalls of higher education as a central, yet profoundly under-examined, manager of urban districts in today's cities.
